Anecdote related by Ella and Jennie Chandler, March 30, 1937.

Gotham

They spoke of Tom and Eleanor Churchill, Duxbury residents, who could not resist the temptation to avail themselves of the free ride offered by the railroad when it was built in 1871. So they put on their very best, got on the train and went to Boston. This was in the early morning. They were so confused when they got to the station that they didn't think that it was exactly safe to venture out into the big city so they sat in the station all day and took the train in the afternoon back to Duxbury well pleased with their adventure.
